Intake & Consent

Please read before your first session

What This Is

Symbolic facilitation is a practice of sitting with a figure — an image, an object, a poem — and noticing what it brings up: associations, feelings, and meaning you make of it in your own words and your own time. The facilitator's role is to companion that noticing, not to interpret it for you.

What This Is Not

- It is not psychotherapy or any form of mental health treatment.
- It is not medical care, diagnosis, or treatment of any kind.
- It is not crisis intervention, and is not equipped to respond to a mental health emergency.

If you are currently in crisis, in danger, or in need of mental health treatment, this practice is not a substitute — please seek a licensed professional or emergency services.

If You Are a Licensed Practitioner

You may already integrate symbolic facilitation into clinical or pastoral work under your own scope of practice and supervision. This form does not change or limit that scope — it simply documents that the participant has been informed of what this specific session is and is not.

What To Expect

- Sessions move through noticing, association, feeling, and meaning-making — in any order, and not always in a straight line.
- You are never required to share, explain, or arrive at a conclusion.
- You may stop, pause, or decline any part of a session at any time, without needing to explain why.

Confidentiality

What you share in session is treated as confidential by the facilitator, with the same limits that apply to any helping conversation: concerns about safety to yourself or others may need to be acted on. If you have questions about confidentiality before beginning, ask your facilitator directly.
